Off-the-Job Training: A Guide for Employers

Why off-the-job training matters

Every apprentice must spend part of their paid working hours on off-the-job (OTJ) training. It is a condition of apprenticeship funding and, more importantly, it is the time that turns a job into a programme of genuine development. Apprentices who get their OTJ time consistently are far more likely to finish on time and achieve a higher grade.

In short
Your apprentice's training plan shows their planned OTJ hours — for example 310 hours over a 15-month Data Analyst programme, which is around 5 hours per week. Protecting a regular weekly slot is the single most effective thing a line manager can do.

What counts as off-the-job training

Counts	Does not count
Delcorn live workshops and recordings	Progress reviews
1:1 coaching with the skills coach	English and maths (Functional Skills) study
Online learning modules in Aptiva	Doing their normal job
Shadowing colleagues in other teams	Training outside paid hours (without time off in lieu)
Stretch projects that build new skills	The end-point assessment itself
Writing assignments and reflective journals	Mandatory company training unrelated to the standard

How OTJ is recorded

Apprentices record their OTJ in Aptiva, our e-portfolio, at least weekly. Workshop attendance is recorded automatically. The skills coach checks entries every month, and you will see the OTJ position at every 12-weekly progress review. You can view your apprentices' progress at any time through the Aptiva Employer Portal.

How we rate progress

Rating	OTJ logged vs expected to date	What we will ask of you
Green	92% or more	Keep doing what you're doing
Amber	78% to under 92%	Agree a short catch-up plan with the coach
Red	Under 78%	Meet with the coach and delivery manager to protect time and agree a recovery plan

What we ask of line managers

1 Agree a regular, protected weekly learning slot with your apprentice and put it in both calendars.

2. Attend the 12-weekly progress review (60 minutes, on Teams). We aim for employer attendance at 90% of reviews.
3. Give the apprentice real workplace projects that let them practise new skills.
4. Sign the review record in Aptiva within 10 working days.
5. Tell the skills coach early about changes — new role, extended leave, redundancy risk or wellbeing concerns.

Frequently asked questions

Can OTJ be done in one block rather than weekly?

Yes. Some employers prefer a study day every fortnight or a block week. What matters is that the planned total is reached by the end of the practical period and recorded accurately.

What if peak season means my apprentice can't take time this month?

Talk to the skills coach before it happens. We can re-profile OTJ around busy periods, but we must agree it in writing and the total cannot reduce.

What happens if OTJ falls too far behind?

The apprentice is rated Red and we will contact you to agree a recovery plan. If OTJ cannot be released, the apprenticeship may need to be paused or ended, which affects your levy investment.
